

Bibliography of Translations of Selected Atomic Bomb Writers - Analysis (Part 2)

Urszula Styczek

1. Introduction

In the paper published in the 11th Bulletin of Hiroshima Prefectural University (March 2016)<sup>1</sup>, I explained widely about the project of gathering information on multilingual translations of atomic bomb literature 原爆文学. Then, I listed the studies and works of the three most representative writers - Hara Tamiki, Toge Sankichi and Kurihara Sadako - translated into 19 languages.

In this paper, I will present works of other Japanese writers, who are not related merely to atomic bomb literature, but also left some distinguished writings about the tragedy in Hiroshima. However, this time I will approach this topic from two different perspectives. In the first part, I will present 11 authors and their works, indicating into what languages they have been translated. Next, I will mention shortly one of those I referred to widely in the previous paper, i.e., Hara Tamiki, who is the most famous abroad among those three. Then I will briefly discuss the most brilliant author of juvenile literature on the tragedy in Hiroshima, Nakazawa Keiji. Finally, I will discuss three representatives of memoirs on the bombing - Nagai Takashi, Hachiya Michihiko and Osada Arata. This selection has a very simple reason. These writers have been translated all over the world in all continents, including Africa and South America.

In the second part, I will concentrate on 24 languages in which the 11 literary writers have been translated. It means I will be dealing with the same material, i.e., their works, but I will approach them from the language angle.

I have chosen the most translated literary works written by following authors: Ibuse Masaji (22), Oe Kenzaburo (9), Ota Yoko (6), Hayashi Kyoko (6), Inoue Hisashi (6), Murai Shimako (5), Oda Makoto (4), Inoue Mitsuharu (4), Sata Ineko (4), Shoda Shinobu (3) and Agawa Hiroyuki (2).

12. Hara Tamiki's 原民喜 novels and poetry have been translated into following 17 languages: Albanian, Arabic, Chinese, Czech, English, Esperanto, French, German, Hungarian, Italian, Korean, Polish, Russian, Serbian, Slovak, Spanish and Swedish. In Arabic or Swedish, there are only some translations of his poetry; in Albanian though, we can find only one poem, the most famous one, 「水ヲ下サイ」(Give Me Water) in the translation of Oe Kenzaburo's 『ヒロシマ・ノート』(Hiroshima Notes), in the 5th Chapter 「屈伏しない人々」(Unsurrendered People). Also, the same poem appears only there in Italian, French or Korean translations of Oe's novel. The most brilliant work of Hara Tamiki, 『夏の花』(Summer Flowers) has been translated into 14 languages: Czech, Chinese, English, Esperanto, French, German, Hungarian, Italian, Korean, Polish, Russian, Serbian, Slovak, Spanish. As to check the earliest translations, English was the first, published already in 1953 by George Saito, Russian in 1961, Hungarian in 1967, Polish in 1972, and German (East Germany) in 1975; in the 80s – French, Slovenian and Slovak. Relatively new translations in Europe are Italian, from 2010 and Spanish from 2012. Also Korean and Chinese translations appeared in the first decade of the 21st century. Here I should emphasize that only a few countries, such as France, Italy and the USA, made the full translation of Hara Tamiki's trilogy: 「壊滅の序曲」(Prelude to Annihilation)「夏の花」(Summer Flowers) and 「廃墟から」(From the Ruins)<sup>3</sup>.

13. Nakazawa Keiji's 中沢啓治 most famous manga (cartoon), 『はだしのゲン』(Barefoot Gen) is a perfect example of a work from the second group named Juvenile Literature. It is considered the most translated masterpiece for children worldwide related to the tragedy of Hiroshima. It has been introduced in 22 languages, among which two, Mongolian and Lao, are not pure translation of the manga but picture books telling the story of Gen. And two more languages are in a process of translation. Also, there are languages, such as Russian or Italian, where the completely new versions are on sale. These are the 20 languages: Arabic (Vol. 1 in 2015, but the others are on the way), Croatian (Vol. 1 and 2 in 2013), Dutch (Vol. 1 and 2 in 2006), English (two separated projects: the first started in 1978, and the second - in 2004; both concluded with 10 volumes), Esperanto (Vol. 1 in 1985), Finnish (Vol. 1 and 2 in 2006), French (One volume in 1983 and Vol. 1-6 in 2004-2005), German (one volume in 1982 and Vol. 1-4 in 2003-2004), Indonesian (Vol. 1-20 between 1996 and 2002), Italian (Vol. 1 and 2 in 1999-2001, and the new translation in three doubled volumes 1-6 in 2014-2015), Korean (Vol. 1-10 in 2000-2001), Persian (Vol. 1 and 2 in 2013), Polish (Vol. 1-10 between 2004-2011), Portuguese in Brazil (the 1st serial Vol. 1-4 in 2000-2001, the 2nd serial Vol. 1-9 2011-2015), Russian (the 1st serial Vol. 1-10 in 1995-2001; the 2nd serial of doubles volumes Vol.1-5 in 2013-2016), Sinhalese in Sri Lanka (Vol.1 and 2 in 2015), Spanish (in Madrid Vol. 1-7 2002-2004, and in Barcelona Vol. 1 and 2 in 2015), Swedish (one volume in 1985), Thai (Vol. 1-10 in 2006-2007), Turkish (Vol. 1-4 in 2007-2009), Ukrainian (Vol. 1 in 2009). Chinese and Vietnamese translations are in the future preparation process, so we can say that Barefoot Gen would be known in 24 languages. The manga was published in the mid 1970s, and already the first English version appeared in Japan in 1978, later in the 80s a French and German attempts were published in Europe. However, the greatest interest in Barefoot Gen started at the beginning of the 21st century, so approximately 30 years after the original work.

14. Nagai Takashi's 永井 隆 books belong to the third group named Memoirs. And here is his most translated diary, 『長崎の鐘』 (The Bells of Nagasaki), published in Japan in 1949. It was translated into 12 languages, but - comparing to Nakazawa's Barefoot Gen - this novel-diary was already available in foreign languages in Europe in the early 1950s. Nagai, a medical doctor was converted into Catholicism, so his works became famous among Christian countries : in Italy in 1952, in Germany in 1953, in France in 1953, in Poland in 1955, and in Portugal in 1956. A Spanish version was published in Mexico in 1952. Surprisingly, the first English translation of The Bells of Nagasaki<sup>4</sup> was officially published in 1984, and if to compare with other non-Christian countries, such as Indonesia (translation in 1989) or Thai (translation in 1998), this information would be (is ?) really unexpected. Here is the list of the languages, in which The Bells of Nagasaki has been translated: Czech, English, French, German, Hungarian, Indonesian, Italian, Korean, Polish, Portuguese, Spanish, Thai. Even though The Bells of Nagasaki is the most translated book worldwide, there are translations of his other books in rather rare languages, for example: We of Nagasaki 『私たちは長崎にいた』 in Burmese (2002), Danish (1951) or Dutch (1952). On the other hand, there are Chinese versions<sup>5</sup> of Leaving My Beloved Children Behind 『この子を残して』 or 『いとし子よ』<sup>6</sup>.
15. Hachiya Michihiko 蜂谷道彦 is famous worldwide only for one masterpiece, i.e. Hiroshima Diary: The Journal of a Japanese Physician. August 6 - September 30, 1945 『ヒロシマ日記』, published in a journal Teishin Igaku between 1950 and 1952; then translated into 20 languages: Arabic (1977), Chinese Traditional and Chinese Simplified (both 1958), Czech (1956 and then in 1978 with a different translation), Dutch (1955), English (1955), Finnish (1967), French (1956 and 2011), German (1955), Greek (1963), Italian (1955), Latvian (1957), Polish (1955, but only a fragment), Portuguese (1959), Sinhalese (2007), Slovak (1957), Slovenian (1958), Spanish (1957 in Argentina and 2005 in Spain), Swedish (1956) and Thai (1984). As we can see, in most European countries this shocking report of a doctor from Hiroshima was published soon after the original version. Moreover, what is amazing that this translation was also done in Sri Lanka; however, I could not find any Korean translations yet.

4 The translation by the Jesuit priest, William Johnson, was made already in 1949, but the book was refused publication by the American forces occupying Japan, until an appendix describing Japanese atrocities in the Philippines was added but later removed.

5 Published recently in Taiwan though, as in the mainland China Christianity is not very welcomed.

16. Osada Arata 長田新 compiled 105 essays of the children who survived the atomic bombardment, and in 1951 published his book, Children of the A-bomb: the Testament of the Boys and Girls of Hiroshima 『原爆の子：広島の少年少女のうたえ』. Soon later, the compilation was translated into Esperanto by a group of Esperanto activists in Osaka, and was released on the 7th anniversary of the atomic bombing in August 1952. Comparing this book to other translations of memoirs or literary works, some interesting facts should be mentioned here, i.e. the contents of each translation and the languages are sometimes very rare. In most languages the translations do not contain all 105 essays. For example, the Esperanto abridged translation has only 70 pages, but was the first to reach foreign readers; two-three years later, Norwegian and Danish translations were based on the first English version made by Jean Dan and Ruth Sieben-Morgen and published in Tokyo in 1959. Almost at the same time, German translation, also based on the English book, was issued in West Germany and soon later in East Germany. In 1980, the full English version was reedited by Fukushima Yoichi and the Committee for Children of Hiroshima, retitled as Children of Hiroshima<sup>7</sup>, published in Japan by The Asahi Evening News, and reprinted in London and New York in the same year. Later, some abridged translations, such as in Polish (67 essays of 105), Persian<sup>8</sup>, Russian (44 essays), Turkish (a booklet consisting about 30 pages in 1975, enlarged in 1989 into 80 pages), Greek, Indonesian (11 essays) or Finnish were published. According to the notes made by the son of Osada Arata, Osada Goro, the full translations of the compilation are in Chinese, Korean and Vietnamese. Finally, only this book was translated to such rare languages as Swahili (17 essays) and Kalaallisut (West Greenlandic language). Here is the list of 18 languages: Chinese Simplified (1989), Danish (1962), English (1959, 1980), Esperanto (1952), Finnish (1984), German (West G. 1962, East G. 1966), Greek (1985), Indonesian (2009), Kalaallisut (1968), Korean (1996), Norwegian (1961), Persian (1975), Polish (1976), Russian (2010), Swahili (2015), Swedish (1992), Turkish (1975, 1989) and Vietnamese (2000). Some years ago, there was a note that the French translation was being planned, but there is no sign about it yet; neither Spanish nor Italian versions have appeared yet.

7 The subtitle added in the note from Editor is: An Appeal from the Children of Hiroshima.

8 It was found recently by Isooda Ajdari in the National Museum of Iran in Teheran: a very thin booklet with no specific information about the publishing company, but including the title, the name of the original author and several pages of Persian translation.

4. Conclusion

How is HIROSHIMA or ヒロシマ introduced abroad ? How is the tragedy seen there through the literary works, cartoons as well as memoirs and diaries ? I tried to find the answer to these questions by gathering the information about the most widely translated books. The highest popularity is taken by the manga, Barefoot Gen of Nakazawa Keiji, introduced by 22 or even more (24) languages, sometimes even by new versions or picture books. Relatively new cartoon is constantly reintroduced to the youngest generations of readers. Perhaps through the visual version it might be easier to imagine, how big the tragedy of Hiroshima was.

Then, we have Black Rain by Ibuse Masaji in 22 languages and the diary of a medical doctor, Hachiya Michihiko in 20 languages. Another « hit » is Children of Hiroshima by professor Osada Arata in 18 languages. Pure literature, brilliant works of Hara Tamiki have been translated into 14 languages and the book-diaries of a medical doctor, Nagai Takashi have been translated into 12 languages. After checking the time of translations, we can conclude that many of these works were published abroad soon after they had been released in Japan. In almost all cases the first foreign translations were in English, and then – in many cases - soon after, they were translated into other languages using the English translations. This was certainly the case in the 1950s. Recently though, new versions are translated directly from the original Japanese books. There was a time in the 1980s, when the antinuclear activity was enormously vivid, and the interest in Hiroshima through literary works was also lively, the translating of Japanese literary books was also active. Each decenary anniversary of atomic bombardment is celebrated by increasing the number of translations as well.

In the future, it is worth researching about translations of foreign atomic bomb literature translated into Japanese and other languages.

要約

『県立広島大学人間文化学部紀要』第11号に掲載された筆者の論文の続編である。広島への原爆投下に関する作品とその翻訳本の調査をまとめた。本稿の特徴は、第一部に、前回で述べた原民喜の『夏の花』等の外国語訳に関して、新たな情報を追記した。また、海外で広く知られている中沢啓治の『はだしのゲン』の翻訳、永井隆、蜂谷道彦と長田新の回想記・体験記の著者の翻訳を、「原爆文学作家」とは必ずしも言えない11人の作家の作品とその翻訳に追加したことである。第二部に、この11人の作家の作品がどんな言語に翻訳されたかという観点から言語別のリストを作った。
